Agenda

Ryebank Fields is an important area of wild green space that is threatened by a proposed housing development. There is a campaign to save the fields and more recently a community camp. We at the community camp have an area on tarmac that be used as an exhibition space. We intend to create a new exhibition on biodiversity loss that would attract a large and diverse audience in order to convince them of the importance of protecting what wild areas we have left including

Skills

The students involved in the project will be using their soft skills, architectural sketching, photography and real-life model making skills to install an exhibition for this beautiful green field which will be transformed into a free wildlife and vegetations planting for wider community in Manchester.
